The Fringe of the Desert. Helwan, famous for its sulphur springs and fine dry climate, is surrounded on all sides by the desert sands.

The Nile with its broad band of cultivation is about three miles from the modern town.

The village of old Helwan lies among the palms near the river's bank, and every day donkeys and camels pass to and fro across the desert laden with fresh berseen (clover) water-melons, tomatoes, etc., from the luxurious crops grown in the nursery-gardens of the Nile.
